Sherry Marx, professor in the School of Teacher Education and Leadership (TEAL), was recently named editor in chief of the International Journal of Multicultural Education (IJME).

IJME is a peer-reviewed, open access journal that is committed to promoting cross-cultural understanding, educational equity for diverse students, and global justice for marginalized people in all levels of education. The journal accepts high quality submissions globally from the fields of education, anthropology, sociology, cultural studies, and other social sciences.

“This journal is near and dear to my heart with its international and qualitative focus,” said Marx. “The editorial board is an impressive, dedicated international group with folks in South Korea, Australia, Mexico, and several different time zones in the US.”

Marx has worked with IJME since 2017, working with authors and reviewers as a co-editor of the journal. She also guest edited two special issues of the journal: one on critical autoethnography and another on using technology to advance social justice in education. She took over as Editor in Chief in March of 2021.

“My goals for the journal are to keep expanding readership and improving quality,” said Marx. “In the past few years, its international ranking among journals has risen substantially. I hope scholars at USU will consider it as a possible outlet for their research.”

Cindy Jones, TEAL department head, voiced her support for Marx. “Dr. Marx’s expertise in issues of education, diversity, and equality is highly valued,” she said. “We appreciate her contributions to our department and the field of education as a whole, and look forward to seeing where this new opportunity takes her.”